EU boss Jean-Claude Juncker splurged £24,000 of taxpayer's money to charter a private jet for a one-night trip to Rome, shock new figures reveal.

The revelation was part of a slew of expensive travel bills exposed after a European Commission finally handed over the document after a two-year legal battle.

The documents show that jet-setting European Commissioners racked up a £452,770 (500 euros) bill in travel expenses in just two months.

Many contain bills for so-called air taxis - private planes the Eurocrats charter when ordinary flights do not suit their schedule.

Former Ukip leader Nigel Farage branded the claim 'outrageous' and 'clearly over the top'.

Among the most eye-watering claims is one put in by Mr Juncker for a chartered a private plane to jet off to Rome for February 25 and 26 last year - costing £23,862 (26,351 euros).

The European Commission president was part of a nine-person delegation who shunned regular scheduled flights and made the short trip via private aircraft instead.

And serious questions will be raised over why the Brussels politicians ran up the hefty bill as according to the website for Brussels Airport there are six daily flights between the Belgian capital, home to the Commission headquarters, and Rome.

While there is an extra flight from Brussels South Charleroi airport.

In another bumper claim, the Italian politician and EU foreign affairs chief Federica Mogherini claimed nearly £68,000 (75,000 euros) for a trip to Baku, the capital of Azerbaijan.

The most expensive overnight stay, in the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa, cost £568 (629 euros).

The shocking revelations were made public after a legal fight with human rights group Access Info.

Former Ukip leader Nigel Farage, pictured in the European Parliament in Brussels in April, said the hefty travel bills are over the top and excessive

And it is only a tiny fraction of the overseas travel bills the Eurocrats have run up as so far just two months of claims have been published.

Commission spokeswoman Mina Andreeva said the private jet was chartered by Mr Juncker and the delegation because there was 'no viable commercial plane available that would fit the president's agenda'.

And in comments that will infuriate taxpayers, she insisted private flights are 'hard work' because the politicians are 'reading documents with your files and marking them'.

Mr Farage said: 'Outrageous! Juncker spending 27,000 euro on a private jet at taxpayers' expense is clearly over the top especially when many normal flights are available.'

'I suppose these junket expenses are all part of the make-believe 'Brexit bill' which these commissioners have plucked out of thin air and trying to extort from our Government.'
